

Here's an article from the mainstream news that indicates exactly what I'm talking about with the endless sedation of the "imbecile majority". I'll give the author, Eve Conant, the benefit of the doubt: she means well but is little more than a brainwashed stooge of our gang banker criminal elite masters who have successfully taken over "The Late Great USA" from within. If not the other choice is that her woefully ignorant article is a willful part of the sedation being disseminated by the current illegal Administration. (Illegal if the Constitution is to be taken seriously that is). And since this is an Administration rooted in the eugenics and genocidal philosophy of the Nazis and the radical environmentalists willfully knowing this and still writing the tripe that she does is tantamount to pure evil.

And so there's no doubt I'll repeat: The "conspiracy" is already way too advanced; you CANNOT fight this thing with literal weapons and screams of "give me liberty or give me death" as the great, albeit imperfect, Founding Fathers did some 240 years ago. Without further adieu let's present excerpts from this article from the controlled corporate news and then respond:

Rebranding Hate in the Age of Obama (newsweek.com, 4/29/09)

With an African-American president and the economy in bad shape, extremist groups are trying to enter the mainstream—and they're having some success.

It's not about hate, it's about love. Love of white people. That's the message in songs, speeches and casual conversation during a weekend retreat in Zinc, Ark., sponsored by the Christian Revival Center and the Knights Party, an offshoot of the Ku Klux Klan. There's no overt threat of violence here. No cross burnings (or "lightings," as the KKK prefers to call them). The only fire at the grassy compound, located at the end of a long, rocky road circled by turkey vultures, is a bonfire for the Knights youth corps to roast their s'mores. The kids draw pictures of white-hooded Klanspeople and sing songs about the oppressed Aryan race; rousing sermons are read from Bibles decorated with Confederate flags. Aryan souvenirs are for sale, including baseball caps proclaiming IT'S LOVE, NOT HATE and advertising THE ORIGINAL BOYZ IN THE HOOD.

This would all be funny (Jon Stewart, where are you?) if it weren't so disturbing.

Some of the roughly 50 attendees at the Arkansas lovefest wear Knights uniforms with Confederate flags and, along with their children, raise their arms "Heil, Hitler"—STYLE to shouts of "white power!" Robb sometimes dons his white robe and hood and doesn't see why that carries any baggage: "Why do judges wear robes? It's tradition." The Klan's past is misunderstood, he insists—no history of brutal lynchings, torture and intimidation; it's gotten a bad name from, for example, federal provocateurs who instigated violence. While Robb questions the authority of other Klan groups, he happily notes that "a rising tide lifts all ships."

It's hard to conduct accurate surveys of racists, who tend to exaggerate their strength and importance. But it's fair to say that in the Age of Obama, there's growing concern.

The mayor and local law-enforcement officers have spent the past few months working with the FBI to rule out further Klan activities in the area and meeting with local black churches to discuss the problem. As a child, McGehee grew up hearing about the Klan and watching civil-rights marches, he recalls. "The Klan was obviously here then. But I hadn't really heard that word in 25 years," he says. Cynthia Lynch might also have thought the old racists had softened with time; on Foster's MySpace page, according to the SPLC, he listed Jesus Christ as his hero and said he'd like to meet "honest loyal people who are devoted to things and take them seriously." She might have thought the Sons of Dixie would provide something—a sense of community or pride—that her life was missing. She didn't learn otherwise until it was too late.

Let's go through this categorically and in order so there's no confusion.

1. Obama is described as an "African-American president". By "African-American" I guess she means what people used to refer to as "black". This is factually untrue. His father was Kenyan who was killed in a drunk driving incident in his home country. His mother was a white teenager who deserted her son like the father. He was raised by his white grandmother. So by staying strictly within this context we would have to say that Obama is more 'white' than 'African-American'. And I almost hesitate to bring up the name Alan Keyes, "African-American" candidate for president in this context but I am forced. We can't say that color is the real problem in this country because he really is an "African-American" candidate for president. But he's a staunch Biblical conservative which is akin to being an "oreo cookie" in the "African-American" community. Additionally, most political pundits and "experts" will agree that if Colin Powell had run on the Republican ticket in the nineties or 2000 he would quite possibly won the Presidency. But "black" and "conservative" is taboo to most "liberals" as the Lincoln Institute among others will attest. Again it's not about race: if you're "African-American" you must be a "liberal". Now of course "liberal" implies open mindedness and as this quick overview suggests it's anything but.

We haven't even gotten out of the subtitle and we're already in an Orwellian logical log jam.

2. Age of Obama. What exactly does this mean? Does it mean that evil, white, racist Americans have finally "come of age" and elected the first "African-American" president? I just got done documenting at least two "African-Americans" have been in or near the presidential race for over the last 10 years. So Ms. Conant is implying something like this: a few blacks have been allowed to be involved in presidential politics but they were "conservative". Now we have an "African-American" (who remember is half-white) who is more "mainstream" and not so "divisive" so we can go along with him. So again it's not really about race - if it were she would have to support Alan Keyes - but toeing the line of liberalism for the "African-Americans" on their behalf. Of course if you're interceding on their behalf you're actually belittling them like helpless children them since they apparently can't make decisions on their own.

3. The main body. I've chosen a few choice paragraphs to establish Ms. Conant's mindset. She's obviously implying that resisting the "African-American" president puts you in the company of Nazis and the KKK. And by the tone of the last paragraph if you choose to go with Jesus Christ than that seems to be the icing on the cake so to speak. Assuming Ms. Conant means well, and we've already granted her that leniency, there are only two choices here: she is woefully ignorant or really, really dumb. Let's go with ignorant and lay out a few facts:

A. One of the main founders of the KKK was a Confederate General named Albert Pike. His statue in Washington DC is the only one of a Confederate General. In the nineteenth century Mr. Pike, a 32nd Degree Freemason, wrote a book entitled "Morals and Dogma" that basically derides the Christian United States while it lobbies for a "New" Age and a new world order. He and Helena Blavatsky had an intellectual love fest going as they quote and discuss each other and cover the same general themes.

B. Helena Blavatsky was an occultist thoroughly documented in all Sections of the "The THEorY of LIVEvolution". She is regarded as "the mother of the New Age movement". Additionally, she was a major inspiration to Adolf Hitler. She was a blatant racist as she described blacks as "savages" that would never realize the "divine spark" within them so they could never "evolve". This kind of thinking is the EXACT mentality of not just one Adolf Hitler but...

C. Margret Sanger was a disciple of Ms. Blavatsky's work as thoroughly documented in "The THEorY of LIVEvolution" and on this web site. Her life's ambition was to kill off the black "human weeds" and other "misfits". She advocated abortion clinics in all poor black communities in addition to being at the forefront of the American eugenics movement. In so doing she served as another inspiration to one Adolf Hitler.

D. Now we have the "first African-American" (half-white) president who voted against something called The Born Alive Infant Abortion Protection Act. Based on A. thru C. above when it comes to supporting the first "African-American" president it becomes obvious there are only three choices:

- i. blatant ignorance
- ii. stupidity
- iii. pure evil

I'm not at all defending the American Nazi Party or the KKK but it's readily apparent that Ms. Conan wants to lump in with these low lifes those that would dare speak out against the "African-American" president.

Besides a well documented blatant ignorance of history and overall kow-towing to the liberal created near monolithic "African-American community" what does this article really say? Hey "African-Americans" you need us "liberal" and "Progressive" white people to help you out with our "compassion" and protection from those other racist, conservative, Christian, white people (and "oreo cookies") because...well...because you're not capable of doing it on your own. Of course the only way out of this liberal logical log jam is to demean all white people (except themselves of course themselves since they're ‘compassionate’) as racists. But then saying that all people of a given race are of a given disposition really is...racist.

So one has to ask, logically, who is the real ‘racist’ here?

And one more point: As in “To Arms, To Arms” the time for the physical fight is most certainly over. The foxes are inside the hen house as the American Idol dumbed down American “imbecile majority” along with the mostly fatherless broken “African-American community” of the banksta founded and stooge liberal supported “Great” Society is incapable of formulating any kind of meaningful response to this daily media and education system onslaught documented here.

Just as Jesus Christ, the real One, asked his Father God, the real One, for compassion on those that were doing Satan’s work as they literally pounded Him to death we must have compassion the on the ignorant like Eve Conant while there’s still time.

The real problem, just as Jesus Christ, the real One, demonstrated in Solomon’s Temple, are the controllers then and now: the money-changers and their support staff. “They” have taken us over without firing a shot; to shoot now would only get you killed or arrested. We are in the same situation where Jesus told Peter it was too late to fight with swords as the throngs surrounded Him right before the Crucifixion.

In conclusion, ironically enough most of “Them” really are white, elite, evil and racist and Ms. Conant is but an ignorant cog in “Their” machine that keeps us fighting each other while our eyes are off the real target.
